The 2012 International Conference on ICH Safeguarding

1) Theme: Creative values of ICH for sustainable development

2) Duration: 5 October, 2012

3) Venue: Hotel Shinra, Seoul

4) Organiser: ICHCAP

5) Description

On 5 October, the 2012 International Conference on ICH Safeguarding opened with a performance by the Ensemble of Cultural Partners, an international ensemble composed of participants in an exchange programme at the National Theater of Korea. Hailing from seven countries in the Asia-Pacific region, the twelve musicians performed special arrangements of ‘Arirang’ and Johannes Brahms’ ‘Hungarian Dance Number 5’. Both song performances created a meaningful segue into the important topics of the day and more importantly showed how divergent cultures can be linked as a single unit through song and creative art.

In his opening speech at the conference, which was attended by over three hundred participants and prominent international speakers, Dr Samuel Lee (Director, ICHCAP) emphasised that the main purpose of this meeting is to reflect on whether the creative values of ICH exist, and if they do, how they contribute to the sustainable development of human society. This kind of reflection will help us clarify why we should safeguard and promote the ICH in each community.

This theme of diversity leading to unity was echoed as the participants discussed the creative value of ICH for sustainable development. As Chérif Khaznadar (President, Maison des Cultures du Monde) stated in his keynote speech on the progression of the concept of sustainable development in international instruments, a single ICH element is necessarily linked to the greater social and cultural needs of a society and vice versa. And these single elements are sustainable as they are passed from one generation to another.

Through the insights presented, conference attendees were able to walk away with a better understanding of how ICH and sustainable development are linked and of the various ways in which diversity enriches and sustains a society.

Based on the information provided through the presentations, academic inquiry on sustainable development will likely develop more in the ICH field.

Jindo, located in South-West part of Korea, is home to a shaman heritage called ssitgimgut, which is a part of the commemorative rites for ancestors. heritage and to seek measures to safeguard this heritage through international cooperation. As a subsidiary event, shaman performances of Mongolia, Japan, Viet Nam, Myanmar, and India were organised by the World Ethnic Dance Institute (WEDI).

On 1 November, the symposium, with a title of ‘Diversity and Commonality of Shaman Heritage in Asia: Current Safeguarding Status and Challenges of Asian Shaman Heritage’, began with the keynote speeches by Distinguished Professor Dawnhee Yim of Dongguk University and by Distinguished Professor In Whoe Kim of Hanyang University. Dr Yim pointed out that academic research on shamanism so far has been focusing on doctrine, rituals, and the shaman itself. She suggested, however, that future research should focus on the shaman community to develop the international cooperative measures for safeguarding it as an ICH. Dr Kim mentioned that the shaman heritage possesses humanistic, egalitarian, communitarian, communicational, and reconcilable values, and he highlighted that those values should be more disseminated through institutional education.

During the following three sessions, nine presenters invited from Mongolia, Korea, Japan, Philippines, Laos, Viet Nam, India, Bhutan, and Turkey introduced the characteristics, status, and the current challenges with transmitting and safeguarding shaman heritage in each country. Throughout the presentations and discussions, many common elements—such as the belief in spirits, communications with supernatural beings, and shamanistic rituals—are found in Asian shamanism. However, there are also lots of complexities in the shamanism in each country. Most of all, the concept and the definition of shamanism in each country is different. Also, the social conception of shamanism also varies among the countries, especially in India, where the shaman tradition is under the cultural struggles due to the misunderstanding and abuse of shamanism. Many kinds of sexual and physical acts are committed during some rituals, which brought about an anti-shamanism (superstition) movement throughout the nation. However in Viet Nam, Len Dong, one of the nation’s representative shaman rituals, was registered on the national intangible cultural heritage list, and many safeguarding programmes and projects are being conducted for Len Dong. Throughout the symposium, most presenters and discussants agreed that shamanism is an important cultural phenomenon that is in danger in terms of quantity and quality. However, due to the diversity and complexities of shamanism in each country, safeguarding measures should also depend on each state’s circumstances.

In the evening of 1 November, after the symposium, there was a lecture demonstration hosted by Dr Rushi Hwang, a professor at Midea Literature Department of Gwandong University. Seven performing groups from six countries—Korea, Mongolia, Myanmar, Japan, Viet Nam, and India—gave short speeches on their shaman performances and showed a part of their performance as prelude for the next day’s full performances.

On 2 November, a special performance called Representation of Primitive Culture of Humanity-Shaman Heritage in Asia was hosted by Ms Kyeong Soon Hwang, a researcher at the National Research Institute of Cultural Heritage of the Cultural Heritage Administration. Groups from the represented nations gave full performances to an audience of two hundred people who had a chance to enjoy the splendour and spectacle that unfolded on the stage.

Hosted by Jindo County, co-organized by ICHCAP and WEDI, and supported by the Cultural Heritage Administration, the International Symposium on Safeguarding Asian Shaman Heritage and the related events made an opportunity to reconfirm the value of shaman heritage as the origins of human culture and to raise public awareness on the importance and value of it. The symposium was also very meaningful in terms of expanding the network among the shaman practitioners in Asia.
