

Conclusion

The successful implementation of the 2011/2012 Mongolia-Korea Joint Cooperation Project for Safeguarding Intangible Cultural Heritage by Utilising Information Technology has significantly contributed to the improvement of the cultural exchange and relation of the two countries, safeguarding, restoring and developing the intangible cultural heritage. As a result of the cooperation between UNESCO Accredited NGO in Mongolia – the Foundation for the Protection of the Natural and Cultural Heritage and the Korea Intangible Cultural Heritage Centre in Asia and the Pacific Region, Mongolia has gained significantly in the sector of establishing the favourable legal system for safeguarding the intangible cultural heritage, promoting the intangible cultural heritage bearers, and restoring and digitalising the superannuated magnetic tapes. This Project, as a role model, indeed has set the groundwork for the activities of the restoration, digitisation, maintaining and disseminating of the superannuated magnetic tapes being kept in other Mongolian organizations and institutions. Improved capacity-building in the technical and professional fields for the restoration and digitisation of the magnetic tapes is further assuring and allowing us the sustainable continuation of this Project. Therefore, we would like to propose to continue the joint project for the restoration and digitisation of the superannuated magnetic tapes being kept in other Mongolian organizations and institutions. We also consider that cooperation for the establishment and improvement of the ICH information network at the regional level with the involvement of ICH related NGOs is significantly important.
